THE TWOFOLD ASPECT OF PATIENCE

4. An investigative spirit (2 Timothy 2:15).
5. As we learn the truth of god, and apply it to our lives we are preparing for adversity.
- B. "Be sober." This means we must have a calm and collected spirit, which is specially needed in the face of adversity. But to be sober in the face of adversity, we must have the proper attitude toward adversity in the first place (James 1:2,3; 1 Corinthians 10:13). This is moral courage.
- C. "Hope to the end." This means, having made mental preparation, and having maintained a calm and collected spirit, we are to persist and endure.
- D. Patience demands, and results from, the exercise of self-control.
 1. If we want to be able to deal with potential threats, we must be in the habit of doing what is right before these threats become real.
 2. This means we must have enough self-control to establish a routine that incorporates all of our responsibilities (ex.: football practice). Good habits are as hard to break as bad habits.

Conclusion: Could the writer of the book of Hebrews have written to us that which he wrote to the saints in Jerusalem (6:8-12)? Would he, by inspiration, have that same confidence in us? Are we "giving all diligence" to add to our temperance patience? If we are not, why are we not?."
